WHEELS OF BIG SAWMILL START ON LONG GRIND

Flagstaff Lumber Manufacturing Company Starts Off with Best Equipped Sawmill in the Southwest. Financial Success of Enterprise Assured.

The Flagstaff Lumber Manufacturing company started up the machinery of their big sawmill plant November 30 without a hitch, and commenced the actual manufacture of lumber for the market. The new mill is considered by sawmill men to be one of the best equipped sawmills, if not the best and most up-to-date completed. The buildings and necessary machinery and equipment for this work are on the way and will be completed as soon as workmen can construct them. Until the dry kiln is built it will take about three months for lumber to dry, but it is expected that within less time that the kilns will be in operation, thus producing shipping lumber within three to four days.

The mill will be completely equipped with a planing mill which will turn out everything in the line of shop work usually handled by a mill company. Their machinery for this department has especially pleased the new company and they believe they have secured as near perfection as such machinery can be made.

At the present time the company has over a million feet of logs stacked up along their line of logging road, a part of which they intend using up and the people of Flagstaff are generally proud of the big institution, which will bring at least 1,000 more people into the community during the coming year.

The officers of the company are: President, E. T. McGonigle, who was for twenty years general superintendent of the A. L. & T. company, and one of the best posted men on lumbering in the mountains of northern Arizona; vice-president, John G. Verkamp, one of the best-known, hustling young business men of Coconino county; treasurer, J. C. Dolan, formerly prominently identified with real estate and financial interests of Los Angeles; secretary, Jesse L. Boyce, now serving his second term as recorder of Coconino county and a young man of exceptional business qualifications. Charles McGonigle, the mill superintendent, is a lumber expert of splendid ability, with years mill, now operating in the southwest. The mill is a marvel for turning out lumber and not an hour has been lost since first start.

This company starts out under the most auspicious circumstances. At present their logging road extends over five miles southeast into the timber belt, the largest in Arizona. They are cutting now on a seventy-five million foot contract along their line, but within a few years will reach the main timber belt, where there is at the least calculation a cut of fifty years' duration. This timber is conceded to be equal to any in the mountains of the north and is a most excellent quality of Arizona pine.

While the sawmill proper is now turning out green lumber at the rate of 100,000 board feet per day—equal to seven carloads—the box factory and dry kilns have not as yet been along with logs coming in, and part of it to be held in reserve for emergencies during the extremely bad weather of the winter months.

The cut shows the picture of the sawmill proper, without the box factory and other buildings connected with it. When the necessary buildings now going up are completed, the mill site proper will cover sixty acres of ground, aside from a half section to the south adjoining their lumber yards which is leased from the government.

The company owns practically all the lots in that section of Flagstaff and as rapidly as possible are putting up houses for their men. At present they have under construction residences for the president and engineer and main office buildings.

The construction of so big a plant in so short a time has surprised the many visitors to that section of town, of practical experience in the lumber business in Arizona. The stockholders are men of prominence in northern Arizona and southern California, amply able financially to see the big enterprise through should there be accident be any need of it.

While no exact figures have been given out, it is estimated that the total cost of the plant will reach well up to $300,000, but with a lifetime cut of timber upon which to work there is little danger that it will ever shut down on that account. Strange as it may seem, but few people, including old residents of Arizona, realize that northern Arizona contains the greater portion of the largest continuous timber belt in the United States, and the Flagstaff Lumber Manufacturing company is headed with their logging railroad for the center of the finest timber in that enormous belt.
